Hansard Index

Fall 2006 - Spring 2007

Preface

In the early winter of 2007 Hansard published the Fall 2006 index which drew from material not included previously. The new material came from Responses to Questions Taken as Notice and Presenting and Receiving of Petitions, and for the first time there were two additional reference lists: one for subjects, the other by members.

Positive response to broadening of the index was accompanied by requests for a deepening of this resource material. Taking into consideration the welcome remarks of bureaucrats and political staff, and with an awareness of how other jurisdictions cross-reference and note down subjects discussed in debates, following the dissolution of the House on 30 April 2007 the index was revised to increase its usefulness.

What has become the familiar index remains intact, and in it one can easily track, for example, the progress of bills and motions. What is new is that now a reader can look up a member and see when s/he spoke and on what, or look up a topic to trace where it was addressed. That material is drawn from every element of the parliamentary day's routine of business. While not every curve and line of argument in debate could be set down, this detailed index will supply users with ample information.

Since 1996 the index has accompanied or been included with the bound Hansard for each session. That procedure continues, but starting in the summer of 2003, the redesigned index has come out separately for timelier use. The fall index appears in early January, and the fall-spring index in mid-summer. The indices from 2002-2003 through to today are posted on the government web site soon after their publication, making them accessible to everyone.

It is believed this revised and expanded index will be of value to all readers. As before, Hansard welcomes suggestions for future improvements.
